

BANGOR, FALL, WINTER, CLOTHING.

BY BOUTELLE BROTHERS.

ENTERED AS SECOND
CLASS MAIL MATTER.

BANGOR, MAINE, TUESDAY, AUGUST 25, 1896.

Price Three Cents.

VOL. LXIII--NO. 203.

THE BOUTELLE BROTHERS.

Fifteen Dozen Two-Clasp

DUE GLOVES.

COLORS: Navy, Green, Brown, Red and Tan.

ALL NEW FALL SHADES.

S .58

Regular price, $2.00.

Your choice of any of our

SHIRT WAISTS

C-S.

E.C.N.B.S.C.

Great and Special Sale of

CLOTHING!

We want all visitors to the Fair to make themselves at home in our store. Even if you need nothing at present in our line you will leave with the impression that you have seen THE LARGEST CLOTHING STORE IN THE STATE stocked with the largest assortment.

MEN'S, BOYS', AND CHILDREN'S

CLOTHES,

CHOICEST STYLES, STRICTLY TAILOR-MADE and of RELIABLE MATERIAL and every garment marked at the VERY LOWEST POSSIBLE PRICE.

One part of our store is so well lighted as to give our customers a chance to examine the goods closely and have no occasion to regret their purchase.

FOR THIS WEEK WE OFFER

Men's New Style Wool Suits at	$5.00
Men's Black Clay Worsted Suits at	7.00
Men's Scotch Mixture, heavy weight, double breasted Suits at	6.50
Men's Latest Style Scotch Effect, made-to-order, at	10.00
Boys' Good Style Wool Suits, from Men's Overcoats in Great Variety.	1.50 up

Men's Mackintoshes: Lower than any other house in the city.

and see us everybody is welcome at

J. WATERMAN'S ONE PRICE CLOTHING HOUSE, EXCHANGE ST., BANGOR.

W. H. SALEY'S CLOTHING & FURNISHING WILL COMMENCE

MONDAY, AUGUST 24th.

Owing to the recent fire in our store we are obliged to sell the balance of our goods damaged by smoke and water at a great sacrifice, in order to make room for new clothing. This great sale consists of a little smoked and wet, but all desirable goods WHICH MUST BE SOLD AT ONCE.

MEN'S AND BOYS' CLOTHING AND FURNISHING GOODS, HATS, AND CAPS,

You can buy

Men's Suits for	$1.00 and upwards
Men's Pants for	.25 "
Men's Shirts for	.15 "
Boys' Suits for	.25 "
Boys' Pants for	.10 "

Now is the time to buy your clothing for fall and winter. Remember this sale begins Monday, Aug. 24th, and everything must be sold at once.

W. H. SALEY, THE WHITE STORE, No. 9 State Street, Bangor, Me.

Aug. 15.

It To The
Will Pay Come and Summer C. W. Collier's
You See Have

"N. O. J."

Enabled LYNN to know if I had any very chearful begin in the year. When dissatisfied with the best service, would be done, and Local Personals.

Weather Aid Local forecast for Shores, Aug. 24. Weather Tuesday, this weather, weather which

ENTERED AS SECOND
CLASS MAIL MATTER.

At Camp Cleaves.

BANGOR, MAINE, TUESDAY, AUGUST 25, 1896.

Price Three Cents.

VOL. LXIII--NO. 203.

At Camp Cleaves.

Siiousness

is caused by temporal disease, present after and permits food to ferment and putrefy in the stomach. Then follows dizziness, headache,

Hood's PIS

removes nervousness, and it relieved, before, fever or blood poisoning. Hood's PIS stimulates the stomach the liver, cure headache, dizziness, constipation, etc. The only tincture to take with Hood's sarsaparilla.

One of The Sig's of Bangor

is the beautiful display of Decorated China, Fancy Briar-a-louise, Cut Glass and new Lamps to be seen at our store.

It's one of the features of the Eastern Maine State Fair--an art exhibition to which all cordially invited to "Walk in and look around."

P. H. VOSE & CO., 59 MAIN STREET.

Notice of Petition for Discharge.

STATE OF MAINE.

PEACEABLE, Court of Indemnity.

In the case of Charles J. Hill of Bangor, in Franklin County, 100 miles from the ocean, he has been under contract under the name of the Bangor Farming Company, company, to cultivate land in Franklin, Bangor, and a member of the company was elected mayor of St. Louis. In 1888 he was elected governor. He was prominent in the sound money ranks.

Mr. E. H. Greeley, of Ellsworth, is in the city.

Mr. H. T. Phair, of Presque Isle, is in the city.

Mrs. H. W. Hinman has returned from a visit to Dexter.

Prof. H. C. Emery, of Bowdoin College, was in the city yesterday.

Mr. and Mrs. H. Adams, Jr., of New York, were in the city yesterday.

Mr. Arad Thompson, of Bangor, has been in the city yesterday.

Mr. and Mrs. H. B. Porter, of Scranton,
Pa., were in the city yesterday.

Dr. Bailey, of Damariscotta, State Veterinarian, is in the city to attend the fair.

Mrs. F. B. Wing and children, of Waterloo, are visiting friends in Bangor.

Mr. Frank G. Hunt and wife, of Braintree, Mass., are visiting friends here.

Mrs. E. C. Dauphinais has returned from a week's outing at Old Orchard Beach.

D. Detweller, of New York, was in the city yesterday, at the Union House.

Mr. D. A. Barker, Mayor Central bridge hotel, was in the city yesterday.

Mrs. David Gilpatrick and daughter, of Lewiston, are visiting in Bangor this week.

Messrs. Ellis Spear and Jas. Eaton, of Wingfield, Co., were in the city yesterday.

Miss Louise Barbee, of Bangor, is passing several weeks with relatives in St. John.

Mr. F. H. Hall, of the firm of Hall, Whitney & Co., Boston, was in the city yesterday.

Mr. C. Smith, of Brownville, was in the city yesterday at the Penobscot Exchange.

Mrs. Abram W. Sargent, of New York, is visiting her mother, Mrs. Knobell, on State Street.

Misses Mabel and Marion Pritchard are visiting their sister, Mrs. G. E. Bath-gate, of Rockland.

Mr. and Mrs. C. C. Preseott, who have
been at the Port Fort hotel for a month,
have returned home.

Miss Mabel F. Simmons, of Stockton
Springs, is out of the faculty of the Normal School at Castine.

Mrs. A. E. Morris, of Boston, Mass., has been visiting Miss F. P. Vose, at Castine, for a few days.

Mr. Wilkes P. W. Vazeille, of Kenduskeag, was in Castine yesterday. She is one of the faculty in the Castine Normal School.

Mr. and Mrs. S. E. Benson, of Mildred, Mass., who have been visiting relatives at Rockland, are in the city again.

Mr. E. Hodges, the Misses Mitchells, Mrs. Alice Wiggin and Miss Marion Wiggin have been passing a few days at the Port Fort hotel.

Mr. Heyward S. French, of Newcompton, N. H., is visiting his uncle, Mr. L. C. Davis, 133 Court street, during his vacation.

Miss Ella Clifford, of Rockland, has been in the city for a few days.

Mr. and Mrs. C. C. Preseott, who have
been at the Port Fort hotel for a month,
have returned home.

Mr. and Mrs. H. C. Davis, of Rockland, have been in the city for a few days.

Mr. and Mrs. C. C. Preseott, who have
been at the Port Fort hotel for a month,
have returned home.

Mr. and Mrs. C. C. Preseott, who have
been at the Port Fort hotel for a month,
have returned home.

Mr. and Mrs. C. C. Preseott, who have
been at the Port Fort hotel for a month,
have returned home.

Mr. and Mrs. C. C. Preseott, who have
been at the Port Fort hotel for a month,
have returned home.

Mr. and Mrs. C. C. Preseott, who have
been at the Port Fort hotel for a month,
have returned home.

Mr. and Mrs. C. C. Preseott, who have
been at the Port Fort hotel for a month,
have returned home.

Mr. and Mrs. C. C. Preseott, who have
been at the Port Fort hotel for a month,
have returned home.

Mr. and Mrs. C. C. Preseott, who have
been at the Port Fort hotel for a month,
have returned home.

Mr. and Mrs. C. C. Preseott, who have
been at the Port Fort hotel for a month,
have returned home.

Mr. and Mrs. C. C. Preseott, who have
been at the Port Fort hotel for a month,
have returned home.

Mr. and Mrs. C. C. Preseott, who have
been at the Port Fort hotel for a month,
have returned home.

Mr. and Mrs. C. C. Preseott, who have
been at the Port Fort hotel for a month,
have returned home.

Mr. and Mrs. C. C. Preseott, who have
been at the Port Fort hotel for a month,
have returned home.

Mr. and Mrs. C. C. Preseott, who have
been at the Port Fort hotel for a month,
have returned home.

Mr. and Mrs. C. C. Preseott, who have
been at the Port Fort hotel for a month,
have returned home.

Mr. and Mrs. C. C. Preseott, who have
been at the Port Fort hotel for a month,
have returned home.

Mr. and Mrs. C. C. Preseott, who have
been at the Port Fort hotel for a month,
have returned home.

Mr. and Mrs. C. C. Preseott, who have
been at the Port Fort hotel for a month,
have returned home.

Mr. and Mrs. C. C. Preseott, who have
been at the Port Fort hotel for a month,
have returned home.

Mr. and Mrs. C. C. Preseott, who have
been at the Port Fort hotel for a month,
have returned home.

Mr. and Mrs. C. C. Preseott, who have
been at the Port Fort hotel for a month,
have returned home.

Mr. and Mrs. C. C. Preseott, who have
been at the Port Fort hotel for a month,
have returned home.

Mr. and Mrs. C. C. Preseott, who have
been at the Port Fort hotel for a month,
have returned home.

Mr. and Mrs. C. C. Preseott, who have
been at the Port Fort hotel for a month,
have returned home.

Mr. and Mrs. C. C. Preseott, who have
been at the Port Fort hotel for a month,
have returned home.

Mr. and Mrs. C. C. Preseott, who have
been at the Port Fort hotel for a month,
have returned home.

Mr. and Mrs. C. C. Preseott, who have
been at the Port Fort hotel for a month,
have returned home.

Mr. and Mrs. C. C. Preseott, who have
been at the Port Fort hotel for a month,
have returned home.

Mr. and Mrs. C. C. Preseott, who have
been at the Port Fort hotel for a month,
have returned home.

Mr. and Mrs. C. C. Preseott, who have
been at the Port Fort hotel for a month,
have returned home.

Mr. and Mrs. C. C. Preseott, who have
been at the Port Fort hotel for a month,
have returned home.

Mr. and Mrs. C. C. Preseott, who have
been at the Port Fort hotel for a month,
have returned home.

Mr. and Mrs. C. C. Preseott, who have
been at the Port Fort hotel for a month,
have returned home.

&lt;p

The Whig and Courier

BY BOUTELLE BROTHERS.

All business letters should be addressed to Boutelle Brothers, and commercial interests for publication should be addressed "Editor of Whig and Courier."

TUESDAY, AUGUST 25, 1896

REPUBLICAN NOMINATIONS

For President
WILLIAM MCKINLEY,
Of OhioFor Vice President
GARRET A. HOBART,
Of New JerseyFor Governor
LLEWELLYN POWERS,
Of Houston

FOR PRESIDENTIAL ELECTORS

For the District of Columbia
JOHN P. HALEY, of Virginia
JOEL WILSON, of Georgia

First District—EDWIN PARSONS

Second District—JAMES C. COON

Third District—FRED ATWOOD

Fourth District—ALBERT H. SAWYER

FOR CONGRESSMEN

Albert District—WILLIAM L. STODDARD

Second District—NELSON DUNLAP, Jr.

Third District—CHARLES A. BOUTELLE

County Nominations

Senators—William Egan,
Edgar B. Weeks

Representatives—Charles E. Brown

Sheriff—Charles E. Brown

County Auditor—Hermon L. Smith

County Treasurer—Henry L. Smith

County Sheriff—Henry L. Smith

FOR REPRESENTATIVES TO THE LEGISLATURE

PAUL H. STETSON

CHARLES E. PEARL

JOHN W. PALMER

State Election, Monday, Sept. 14

For Assignment of Speakers See Third Page

More Garbed Quotations

The Commercial does not attempt to reconcile the contradictory statements to which we called its attention Monday morning by use of the parallel column, but again resorts to garbled extracts from the speech of Mr. Blaine. The Dexter correspondent of the D. W. Whig having referred to the repudiation scheme advocated by Mayor Han on the Commercial declaration that if Blaine is a repudiator then Mr. Blaine must be classed in the same category and in support of this insertion quotes an extract from the speech delivered by Mr. Blaine in 1873 relative to the payment of bonds in standard coin. It conveniently selects the quotations as pointing to its purpose. In the paragraph just preceding that from which the Commercial quotes, and from which it carefully eliminates the statement that at that time gold and silver were equally valuable in the European as well as in the American market, Mr. Blaine said:

The interest of the public creditor is to be paid up in gold, and the debts of the whole people, the debts of all, their effects as well as the evils of MIGHT INFLICT LION HAN BY PAYING AN INFERNAL DOLLAR WHICH RECOULD LION HAN WITH A FRENCHMAN AS PROJECTED AS THE REPUDIATION SCHEME OF THE COMMERCIAL DECLARED BY THE COUNCIL OF THE FOODS, WHO'S WHO HAVE WITH US AGAINST US, AND ON WHOM THE MOST DISHONEST SCHEME OF INFLATION MONEY WILL BE LITURGICAL.

It will be seen that it would be impossible to point out in more forcible terms the disastrous effects to follow the payment of our bonded debt in the inferior dollars now advocated by the Commercial than was contained in the very speech from which the Commercial makes its garbled quotation. In each and every case it is just the same. Analyze the statements of the free silver men and it will always be found that the object aimed at is to deceive the people. Repudiation pure and simple is exactly the programme offered by Bryan. We invite the attention of the Commercial to the following speech recently delivered in Watertown, New York:

"I want to call your attention to a part of Mr. Bryan's recent speech in New York. He has unsuccessfully tried to dislodge his character. To allay the apprehensions of the debtor, that free silver legislation might not be enacted before the creditor could call him, he says: 'Just as soon as our President, I shall rush the system through before the creditor has a chance to call in his loan or foreclose his mortgage. Mr. Bryan says:

"If in November the people declare themselves in favor of the immediate restoration of bimetallism, the system can be brought about without delay. In this case, it can be done by virtue of the President's power to convene Congress in extraordinary session. The debtor has said, 'How shall I be able to pay my debt at the rate of 4% on account of the depreciation of the dollar?' I am sure you believe in the debasement of the dollar, which will allow the dishonest debtor to repudiate his debts.'

"And how does Mr. Bryan reconcile this with his statement, in prior publications, that the coinage rates, the price of silver bullion to $1.39 per ounce, measured by gold? He cannot reconcile the two statements, because the law is true that there will be need for bimetallism because the debtor will be benefited if silver goes to a par with gold. But that Mr. Bryan knows that his prior assertion is false, and that he was not sincere when he gave it, is evident from the words of his speech:

"Good-night Billy!"

Mr. Bryan's theory undoubtedly was that he would dislodge Eastern prejudice and dislodge the public as his personality. The Boy-Orator was well known for his oratorical skill, but he failed to make a sufficient impression on the public. He had to make a speech in Madison Square Garden, but he was in his own state and city. For a Nebraskan to come to the same spot was an open and obvious appeal to the spectators. No in the rhetorical world ambitious and much-advertised performances of that sort have to be great and instantaneous successes, or else they are tremendous failures. In attempting what he did, Mr. Bryan was bound to achieve the most brilliant success or to lose everything. A moderate attainment would not do, recognition must be immediate and hearty, the applause uproarious, or the whole place ruined. Whether he could have won, by other tactics, so much as a success deserves, we need not discuss, but the fact is undoubted that the piece, as given, was hopelessly dudged. The claque could not save it. The managers have promptly accepted the popular verdict and withdrawn it. In reaching out for a grand triumph, Mr. Bryan has but made his failure spectacular in the last degree.

One explanation of his disasters undoubtedly in his sudden change of role. A comedian sometimes essayes heavy tragedy, but he does it an enormous risk. Especially, if, in the leaves the audience in ignorance, and lets them think it is a comedy, they are going to see a farce. The Madison Square audience felt not only disappointed, but tricked. They had been led to expect a sort of Buffalo Bill show. The dashing cowboy they had heard talk of, they would have laughed at for his free Western sallies and audacities, but to call him startlingly transformed into a Professor Dryasdust, passing through two mortal hours, this was too much. No wonder that they fled before his pontifical peripatetic manuscript with cries of "Good-night Billy!"

Mr. Bryan's theory undoubtedly was that he would dislodge Eastern prejudice and dislodge the public as his personality. The Boy-Orator was well known for his oratorical skill, but he failed to make a sufficient impression on the public. He had to make a speech in Madison Square Garden, but he was in his own state and city. For a Nebraskan to come to the same spot was an open and obvious appeal to the spectators. No in the rhetorical world ambitious and much-advertised performances of that sort have to be great and instantaneous successes, or else they are tremendous failures. In attempting what he did, Mr. Bryan was bound to achieve the most brilliant success or to lose everything. A moderate attainment would not do, recognition must be immediate and hearty, the applause uproarious, or the whole place ruined. Whether he could have won, by other tactics, so much as a success deserves, we need not discuss, but the fact is undoubted that the piece, as given, was hopelessly dudged. The claque could not save it. The managers have promptly accepted the popular verdict and withdrawn it. In reaching out for a grand triumph, Mr. Bryan has but made his failure spectacular in the last degree.

One explanation of his disasters undoubtedly in his sudden change of role. A comedian sometimes essayes heavy tragedy, but he does it an enormous risk. Especially, if, in the leaves the audience in ignorance, and lets them think it is a comedy, they are going to see a farce. The Madison Square audience felt not only disappointed, but tricked. They had been led to expect a sort of Buffalo Bill show. The dashing cowboy they had heard talk of, they would have laughed at for his free Western sallies and audacities, but to call him startlingly transformed into a Professor Dryasdust, passing through two mortal hours, this was too much. No wonder that they fled before his pontifical peripatetic manuscript with cries of "Good-night Billy!"

Mr. Bryan's theory undoubtedly was that he would dislodge Eastern prejudice and dislodge the public as his personality. The Boy-Orator was well known for his oratorical skill, but he failed to make a sufficient impression on the public. He had to make a speech in Madison Square Garden, but he was in his own state and city. For a Nebraskan to come to the same spot was an open and obvious appeal to the spectators. No in the rhetorical world ambitious and much-advertised performances of that sort have to be great and instantaneous successes, or else they are tremendous failures. In attempting what he did, Mr. Bryan was bound to achieve the most brilliant success or to lose everything. A moderate attainment would not do, recognition must be immediate and hearty, the applause uproarious, or the whole place ruined. Whether he could have won, by other tactics, so much as a success deserves, we need not discuss, but the fact is undoubted that the piece, as given, was hopelessly dudged. The claque could not save it. The managers have promptly accepted the popular verdict and withdrawn it. In reaching out for a grand triumph, Mr. Bryan has but made his failure spectacular in the last degree.

One explanation of his disasters undoubtedly in his sudden change of role. A comedian sometimes essayes heavy tragedy, but he does it an enormous risk. Especially, if, in the leaves the audience in ignorance, and lets them think it is a comedy, they are going to see a farce. The Madison Square audience felt not only disappointed, but tricked. They had been led to expect a sort of Buffalo Bill show. The dashing cowboy they had heard talk of, they would have laughed at for his free Western sallies and audacities, but to call him startlingly transformed into a Professor Dryasdust, passing through two mortal hours, this was too much. No wonder that they fled before his pontifical peripatetic manuscript with cries of "Good-night Billy!"

Mr. Bryan's theory undoubtedly was that he would dislodge Eastern prejudice and dislodge the public as his personality. The Boy-Orator was well known for his oratorical skill, but he failed to make a sufficient impression on the public. He had to make a speech in Madison Square Garden, but he was in his own state and city. For a Nebraskan to come to the same spot was an open and obvious appeal to the spectators. No in the rhetorical world ambitious and much-advertised performances of that sort have to be great and instantaneous successes, or else they are tremendous failures. In attempting what he did, Mr. Bryan was bound to achieve the most brilliant success or to lose everything. A moderate attainment would not do, recognition must be immediate and hearty, the applause uproarious, or the whole place ruined. Whether he could have won, by other tactics, so much as a success deserves, we need not discuss, but the fact is undoubted that the piece, as given, was hopelessly dudged. The claque could not save it. The managers have promptly accepted the popular verdict and withdrawn it. In reaching out for a grand triumph, Mr. Bryan has but made his failure spectacular in the last degree.

One explanation of his disasters undoubtedly in his sudden change of role. A comedian sometimes essayes heavy tragedy, but he does it an enormous risk. Especially, if, in the leaves the audience in ignorance, and lets them think it is a comedy, they are going to see a farce. The Madison Square audience felt not only disappointed, but tricked. They had been led to expect a sort of Buffalo Bill show. The dashing cowboy they had heard talk of, they would have laughed at for his free Western sallies and audacities, but to call him startlingly transformed into a Professor Dryasdust, passing through two mortal hours, this was too much. No wonder that they fled before his pontifical peripatetic manuscript with cries of "Good-night Billy!"

Mr. Bryan's theory undoubtedly was that he would dislodge Eastern prejudice and dislodge the public as his personality. The Boy-Orator was well known for his oratorical skill, but he failed to make a sufficient impression on the public. He had to make a speech in Madison Square Garden, but he was in his own state and city. For a Nebraskan to come to the same spot was an open and obvious appeal to the spectators. No in the rhetorical world ambitious and much-advertised performances of that sort have to be great and instantaneous successes, or else they are tremendous failures. In attempting what he did, Mr. Bryan was bound to achieve the most brilliant success or to lose everything. A moderate attainment would not do, recognition must be immediate and hearty, the applause uproarious, or the whole place ruined. Whether he could have won, by other tactics, so much as a success deserves, we need not discuss, but the fact is undoubted that the piece, as given, was hopelessly dudged. The claque could not save it. The managers have promptly accepted the popular verdict and withdrawn it. In reaching out for a grand triumph, Mr. Bryan has but made his failure spectacular in the last degree.

One explanation of his disasters undoubtedly in his sudden change of role. A comedian sometimes essayes heavy tragedy, but he does it an enormous risk. Especially, if, in the leaves the audience in ignorance, and lets them think it is a comedy, they are going to see a farce. The Madison Square audience felt not only disappointed, but tricked. They had been led to expect a sort of Buffalo Bill show. The dashing cowboy they had heard talk of, they would have laughed at for his free Western sallies and audacities, but to call him startlingly transformed into a Professor Dryasdust, passing through two mortal hours, this was too much. No wonder that they fled before his pontifical peripatetic manuscript with cries of "Good-night Billy!"

Mr. Bryan's theory undoubtedly was that he would dislodge Eastern prejudice and dislodge the public as his personality. The Boy-Orator was well known for his oratorical skill, but he failed to make a sufficient impression on the public. He had to make a speech in Madison Square Garden, but he was in his own state and city. For a Nebraskan to come to the same spot was an open and obvious appeal to the spectators. No in the rhetorical world ambitious and much-advertised performances of that sort have to be great and instantaneous successes, or else they are tremendous failures. In attempting what he did, Mr. Bryan was bound to achieve the most brilliant success or to lose everything. A moderate attainment would not do, recognition must be immediate and hearty, the applause uproarious, or the whole place ruined. Whether he could have won, by other tactics, so much as a success deserves, we need not discuss, but the fact is undoubted that the piece, as given, was hopelessly dudged. The claque could not save it. The managers have promptly accepted the popular verdict and withdrawn it. In reaching out for a grand triumph, Mr. Bryan has but made his failure spectacular in the last degree.

One explanation of his disasters undoubtedly in his sudden change of role. A comedian sometimes essayes heavy tragedy, but he does it an enormous risk. Especially, if, in the leaves the audience in ignorance, and lets them think it is a comedy, they are going to see a farce. The Madison Square audience felt not only disappointed, but tricked. They had been led to expect a sort of Buffalo Bill show. The dashing cowboy they had heard talk of, they would have laughed at for his free Western sallies and audacities, but to call him startlingly transformed into a Professor Dryasdust, passing through two mortal hours, this was too much. No wonder that they fled before his pontifical peripatetic manuscript with cries of "Good-night Billy!"

Mr. Bryan's theory undoubtedly was that he would dislodge Eastern prejudice and dislodge the public as his personality. The Boy-Orator was well known for his oratorical skill, but he failed to make a sufficient impression on the public. He had to make a speech in Madison Square Garden, but he was in his own state and city. For a Nebraskan to come to the same spot was an open and obvious appeal to the spectators. No in the rhetorical world ambitious and much-advertised performances of that sort have to be great and instantaneous successes, or else they are tremendous failures. In attempting what he did, Mr. Bryan was bound to achieve the most brilliant success or to lose everything. A moderate attainment would not do, recognition must be immediate and hearty, the applause uproarious, or the whole place ruined. Whether he could have won, by other tactics, so much as a success deserves, we need not discuss, but the fact is undoubted that the piece, as given, was hopelessly dudged. The claque could not save it. The managers have promptly accepted the popular verdict and withdrawn it. In reaching out for a grand triumph, Mr. Bryan has but made his failure spectacular in the last degree.

One explanation of his disasters undoubtedly in his sudden change of role. A comedian sometimes essayes heavy tragedy, but he does it an enormous risk. Especially, if, in the leaves the audience in ignorance, and lets them think it is a comedy, they are going to see a farce. The Madison Square audience felt not only disappointed, but tricked. They had been led to expect a sort of Buffalo Bill show. The dashing cowboy they had heard talk of, they would have laughed at for his free Western sallies and audacities, but to call him startlingly transformed into a Professor Dryasdust, passing through two mortal hours, this was too much. No wonder that they fled before his pontifical peripatetic manuscript with cries of "Good-night Billy!"

Mr. Bryan's theory undoubtedly was that he would dislodge Eastern prejudice and dislodge the public as his personality. The Boy-Orator was well known for his oratorical skill, but he failed to make a sufficient impression on the public. He had to make a speech in Madison Square Garden, but he was in his own state and city. For a Nebraskan to come to the same spot was an open and obvious appeal to the spectators. No in the rhetorical world ambitious and much-advertised performances of that sort have to be great and instantaneous successes, or else they are tremendous failures. In attempting what he did, Mr. Bryan was bound to achieve the most brilliant success or to lose everything. A moderate attainment would not do, recognition must be immediate and hearty, the applause uproarious, or the whole place ruined. Whether he could have won, by other tactics, so much as a success deserves, we need not discuss, but the fact is undoubted that the piece, as given, was hopelessly dudged. The claque could not save it. The managers have promptly accepted the popular verdict and withdrawn it. In reaching out for a grand triumph, Mr. Bryan has but made his failure spectacular in the last degree.

One explanation of his disasters undoubtedly in his sudden change of role. A comedian sometimes essayes heavy tragedy, but he does it an enormous risk. Especially, if, in the leaves the audience in ignorance, and lets them think it is a comedy, they are going to see a farce. The Madison Square audience felt not only disappointed, but tricked. They had been led to expect a sort of Buffalo Bill show. The dashing cowboy they had heard talk of, they would have laughed at for his free Western sallies and audacities, but to call him startlingly transformed into a Professor Dryasdust, passing through two mortal hours, this was too much. No wonder that they fled before his pontifical peripatetic manuscript with cries of "Good-night Billy!"

Mr. Bryan's theory undoubtedly was that he would dislodge Eastern prejudice and dislodge the public as his personality. The Boy-Orator was well known for his oratorical skill, but he failed to make a sufficient impression on the public. He had to make a speech in Madison Square Garden, but he was in his own state and city. For a Nebraskan to come to the same spot was an open and obvious appeal to the spectators. No in the rhetorical world ambitious and much-advertised performances of that sort have to be great and instantaneous successes, or else they are tremendous failures. In attempting what he did, Mr. Bryan was bound to achieve the most brilliant success or to lose everything. A moderate attainment would not do, recognition must be immediate and hearty, the applause uproarious, or the whole place ruined. Whether he could have won, by other tactics, so much as a success deserves, we need not discuss, but the fact is undoubted that the piece, as given, was hopelessly dudged. The claque could not save it. The managers have promptly accepted the popular verdict and withdrawn it. In reaching out for a grand triumph, Mr. Bryan has but made his failure spectacular in the last degree.

One explanation of his disasters undoubtedly in his sudden change of role. A comedian sometimes essayes heavy tragedy, but he does it an enormous risk. Especially, if, in the leaves the audience in ignorance, and lets them think it is a comedy, they are going to see a farce. The Madison Square audience felt not only disappointed, but tricked. They had been led to expect a sort of Buffalo Bill show. The dashing cowboy they had heard talk of, they would have laughed at for his free Western sallies and audacities, but to call him startlingly transformed into a Professor Dryasdust, passing through two mortal hours, this was too much. No wonder that they fled before his pontifical peripatetic manuscript with cries of "Good-night Billy!"

Mr. Bryan's theory undoubtedly was that he would dislodge Eastern prejudice and dislodge the public as his personality. The Boy-Orator was well known for his oratorical skill, but he failed to make a sufficient impression on the public. He had to make a speech in Madison Square Garden, but he was in his own state and city. For a Nebraskan to come to the same spot was an open and obvious appeal to the spectators. No in the rhetorical world ambitious and much-advertised performances of that sort have to be great and instantaneous successes, or else they are tremendous failures. In attempting what he did, Mr. Bryan was bound to achieve the most brilliant success or to lose everything. A moderate attainment would not do, recognition must be immediate and hearty, the applause uproarious, or the whole place ruined. Whether he could have won, by other tactics, so much as a success deserves, we need not discuss, but the fact is undoubted that the piece, as given, was hopelessly dudged. The claque could not save it. The managers have promptly accepted the popular verdict and withdrawn it. In reaching out for a grand triumph, Mr. Bryan has but made his failure spectacular in the last degree.

One explanation of his disasters undoubtedly in his sudden change of role. A comedian sometimes essayes heavy tragedy, but he does it an enormous risk. Especially, if, in the leaves the audience in ignorance, and lets them think it is a comedy, they are going to see a farce. The Madison Square audience felt not only disappointed, but tricked. They had been led to expect a sort of Buffalo Bill show. The dashing cowboy they had heard talk of, they would have laughed at for his free Western sallies and audacities, but to call him startlingly transformed into a Professor Dryasdust, passing through two mortal hours, this was too much. No wonder that they fled before his pontifical peripatetic manuscript with cries of "Good-night Billy!"

Mr. Bryan's theory undoubtedly was that he would dislodge Eastern prejudice and dislodge the public as his personality. The Boy-Orator was well known for his oratorical skill, but he failed to make a sufficient impression on the public. He had to make a speech in Madison Square Garden, but he was in his own state and city. For a Nebraskan to come to the same spot was an open and obvious appeal to the spectators. No in the rhetorical world ambitious and much-advertised performances of that sort have to be great and instantaneous successes, or else they are tremendous failures. In attempting what he did, Mr. Bryan was bound to achieve the most brilliant success or to lose everything. A moderate attainment would not do, recognition must be immediate and hearty, the applause uproarious, or the whole place ruined. Whether he could have won, by other tactics, so much as a success deserves, we need not discuss, but the fact is undoubted that the piece, as given, was hopelessly dudged. The claque could not save it. The managers have promptly accepted the popular verdict and withdrawn it. In reaching out for a grand triumph, Mr. Bryan has but made his failure spectacular in the last degree.

One explanation of his disasters undoubtedly in his sudden change of role. A comedian sometimes essayes heavy tragedy, but he does it an enormous risk. Especially, if, in the leaves the audience in ignorance, and lets them think it is a comedy, they are going to see a farce. The Madison Square audience felt not only disappointed, but tricked. They had been led to expect a sort of Buffalo Bill show. The dashing cowboy they had heard talk of, they would have laughed at for his free Western sallies and audacities, but to call him startlingly transformed into a Professor Dryasdust, passing through two mortal hours, this was too much. No wonder that they fled before his pontifical peripatetic manuscript with cries of "Good-night Billy!"

Mr. Bryan's theory undoubtedly was that he would dislodge Eastern prejudice and dislodge the public as his personality. The Boy-Orator was well known for his oratorical skill, but he failed to make a sufficient impression on the public. He had to make a speech in Madison Square Garden, but he was in his own state and city. For a Nebraskan to come to the same spot was an open and obvious appeal to the spectators. No in the rhetorical world ambitious and much-advertised performances of that sort have to be great and instantaneous successes, or else they are tremendous failures. In attempting what he did, Mr. Bryan was bound to achieve the most brilliant success or to lose everything. A moderate attainment would not do, recognition must be immediate and hearty, the applause uproarious, or the whole place ruined. Whether he could have won, by other tactics, so much as a success deserves, we need not discuss, but the fact is undoubted that the piece, as given, was hopelessly dudged. The claque could not save it. The managers have promptly accepted the popular verdict and withdrawn it. In reaching out for a grand triumph, Mr. Bryan has but made his failure spectacular in the last degree.

One explanation of his disasters undoubtedly in his sudden change of role. A comedian sometimes essayes heavy tragedy, but he does it an enormous risk. Especially, if, in the leaves the audience in ignorance, and lets them think it is a comedy, they are going to see a farce. The Madison Square audience felt not only disappointed, but tricked. They had been led to expect a sort of Buffalo Bill show. The dashing cowboy they had heard talk of, they would have laughed at for his free Western sallies and audac

